Quarterly fund commentary

Credit assets were strong during the fourth quarter, with positive index returns across global high yield, bank loans, global investment grade credit, and emerging market debt. We saw some signs of volatility in mid-November, but the market has since settled back into a low volatility range. Emerging markets debt growth momentum is moderating (namely in Asia and emerging Europe) but the overall trend for improving growth globally continued. The high yield market benefited from rising oil prices and a strong equity market. Corporate bonds continued to perform well. On a regional basis, we believe that Europe is currently the most attractive based on fundamentals. Across credit markets, our portfolio managers continue to focus on solid issuer fundamentals, and look for attractive bonds to add on an opportunistic basis. Overall, we continue to hold our constructive growth and stable inflation views. Global policy is tightening yet well-absorbed by markets. We see little evidence which contests our constructive growth view. The inflation story for the next 6 months looks rather benign. We continue to recommend keeping risk relatively low. Although financial conditions have tightened recently, markets are still operating under loose financial conditions as we are coming off of extremely accommodative policy. Strong global growth, stable inflation and easing central bank policy provides a positive backdrop in our view for credit-related asset classes.
